Lily Springer loves two things in life: her sisters and their bakery. Her days and nights are filled with caring for both.

Having lost their parents two years before, the girls work together to keep their legacy alive, and each one has a responsibility to fulfill. Lily loves baking delicious pastries, bread, cookies and pies for their community, but she feels that something is missing in her life.

Although her time is taken up by her work and helping her older sister run their household, Lily's heart longs for the kind of relationship her parents had, but no one in their small town of Greenwood, Kentucky has ever tried to win her heart. In her youth, her shyness prevented her from responding to any overtures, but now she is just too consumed with her duties to even try.

Gabriel Albrecht works for his father's construction company and is a former charmer of women. However, after having his heart broken, he retreats from the social scene and throws himself into his work. He's done with women now. But when his cousin comes to visit, he is reminded of his former self and knows that he has to take responsibility for his cousin's actions. After all, he is the reason that Mark behaves this way.

When Mark appears to be making advances toward Lily's sisters, Gabriel steps forward to intervene.

He cares deeply for the Springer sisters. Although he and Lily were once close friends, time and changes caused them to drift apart. While they are still friendly, the relationship is a shadow of what it once was. Gabriel feels helpless to change it, believing that Lily will never trust him again because of his past. Still, he wants to protect her sisters from the advances of his flirtatious cousin.

As the anniversary of her parents' death approaches, Lily feels vulnerable and calls out to the Lord for comfort. If she can't have the desires of her heart, she asks that He take them from her. Little does she know that God has a plan for her that will go beyond all her hopes...
